OUR CHAUNCEY.
Still, having been a thrifty man all these years, Mr. Depew should manage to wiggle through without that Equitable retainer—From the Newark News.
Senator Depew has worn the smile that wouldn't come off for many years, and recent developments show that he has been receiving a yearly retainer from the Equitable of $50,000. The wonder is that his smile did not become a hearty laugh.—From the Louisville Evening Post.
Senator Depew ought to tell us what amusing story the latest developments in the life insurance situation reminds him of.—From the Pittsburg Press.
Senator Depew says the Equitable gave him $20,000 a year for advice. That knocks out the theory that advice is cheap.—From the Toledo Blade.
We can now understand how Depew could associate with some of the other United States senators without fear of contamination.—From the Chicago News.
No wonder Senator Chauncey Depew made a reputation as a humorist. With his $50,000 annual retainer, not to speak of other fat pickings, the Equitable treasury was sufficient to keep him in good spirits. But since that Equitable revelation banquet invitations for Chauncey will show a decided slump.—From the Wheeling Intelligencer.
It looks as if somebody were trying to spoil Chauncey Depew's vacation.—From the Chicago Record-Herald.
Another brand of Depew humor falls flat. The Senator's act in borrowing $250,000 from the Equitable on property valued only $150,000 and his failure to pay either principal or interest will fail to draw applause from the policyholders who have had to pay the bills. The motive of the famous impassioned Depew appeal to the directors of the Equitable to wash the company's linen in private, not in public, may have been all the more impassioned, because some of the linen bore the Depew mark.—From the Boston Advertiser.
Mr. Depew says whenever the Equitable asked him for advice "it was freely given," but the evidence discloses that it was well paid for.—From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.
